2. SABINE RÖHSE

The main focus of the Blümchen line is a freely created panneau composed of 14.692 different, individually numbered flowers. A project that took months. As one draws differently every day, depending on one's mood, the look generated is that of a woven pattern. A closer look reveals the individual flowers and numbers unique to each.

3/4/5. ARTIGO

Established in 1961 by the Pirelli Group to produce rubber flooring for commercial and industrial applications, Artigo has ventured into eco-sustainable goods in recent years. Quality components like rubber, natural fibres, and colour pigments are selected according to the lowest environmental impact, both in regard to manufacturing process and lifecycle. The rubber is obtained from caoutchouc, extracted from trees without causing them damage, or from the by-products of benzine. Rubber flooring, at the end of its very long life, can thus be assimilated with solid waste.

6/7. INTERFACE

Interface is a global leader in the design and production of carpet tiles and one of the first companies to publicly commit to sustainability, having made a pledge in the mid-1990s to eliminate environmental impact by 2020. In partnering with the Zoological Society of London (ZSL), a conservation charity, to tackle the growing problem of discarded fishing nets and to establish a community-based supply chain, the livelihood of local fishermen has been improved and an innovative source of recycled materials for use in carpet tiles has been gained. Net Effect, designed by David Oakey, is one a collection that contains 100% recycled yarn – partially derived from discarded fishing nets.
